Iraqi embassies called terrorist bases

By HYAM CORNEY

Jerusalem Post Correspondent LONDON. — The first issue of Britain's new weekly news magazine "Now" charges that Iraql embassies throughnut the West serve as Palestinian terror bases and that Iraql spies posing as diplomats have standing instructione to steal military secrets wherever they can even from fellow Arah countries.

Intelligence expert Rnbert Moss makes these charges in a nine-page articic in Sir James Goldsmith'a magazine, which made its debut here nn Friday. In a "world exclusive." the article contains extracts of the operational plan of the Iraql Directorate of Military Intelligence. It shows that the diplnmat-spies are instructed to eteal an astunishing range nf military secrets, including those relating to nuclear weapons.

Moss saye that much of the information chtained by the Iraql spies is required not by Baghdad "but by the KCB spy masters who have helped to train Iraqi's intelligence agents and whn still receive in Moscow the results of their work."

The so-called "strategic work plan" was drawn up in 1975 on the orders of Iraql strongman Saddam Husseln, says Moss. It sets out the esplonage task assigned to Iraql Inlclilgence nfficers operating all over the world. They include Lt.-Coi, Said Sbukar Sahnin, the Iraql military attache in London. The document also makes it clear that Iraqi emhassies in the West, including London, have been turned into "operational hases for the most fanatical of the Palestinian terrorist groups and for hit men despatched from Bagbdad to pursue bloody Aráb vendettas in Europe."

According to Moss, it is known that frequent meelings take place in London, Brussels and Belrul hetween Soviet and Iraql Intelligence officers. He also cialms that Iraol agents are instructed to report on Zionist nrganizations in Europe "and their role in peacetime and wartime in heiping Israel by sending moocy and voluntcers.

Army silent | Thousands could lose jobs

Cabinet seen favouring IL10b. slash in budget

By SHLOMO MAOZ Post Economic Reporter

A clear majority is expected at today's cabinet meeting in favour of the proposal to cut about IL10b. from development budgets - a move which, if carried out, is likely to throw thousands of workers out of

Purpose of the proposal is to dampen down econnmic activity, which hae driven inflatinn to a yearly rate of 90 per cent. But the government is not expected to decide on the proposal today because of a lack of information nn the implications of such a step, and on how to prevent, as far as possible, massive unemplnyment from resulting. The proposal to the full cabinet is to be presented by Finance Minister Simba Ehrlich, after Deputy Minister Yoram Aridor piloted Its original draft through the Ministerial Economic Committee, which decided to submit it for the consideration of the whole government.

Bank of Israel governor Arnon Gafny told The Jarusalem Post last night that the steps taken by ths government so far to contain Inflation are inadequate. The government must restrain its own surplus demand through cutting its deficit, which has trebled in recent months. But Gafny warned against panic, saying that workers who jost their jobs as a result of government action would easily find new employment in residential building or activities generated by the Negev redeployment.

Ecocomists in the capital forecast s, virtual freeze in building of hospitals, roads, schools, sewage systems, installations of telephone wires and other activities in which the government is involved, if a declsion is taken to halt development hudgets except for defence, settlement and housing. Gafny called for clear and precise planning to deal with the results of the proposed cutback in governmental economic sctivity. But the Bank of Israei does not have exact data on the possible implications, he complained. There is no justification for tampering with the government's foreign currency liberalization measures of 1977, the governor of the central bank sald. His warnings relate not to the present, when Israel holds considerable foreign currency reserves, but to the future. The government must increase interest rates reslistically and expose domestic production to competition from Imports. His personal preference is for cuts in other areas, but if there is no alternative, freezing development budgets would be better than nothing.

Labour and Social Affairs Minister

Israel Katz told The Post last night that first estimates suggest that cutting the development budget would cause unemployment of "only" 6,000-9,000 workers. But this estimate is tentative and depends on 6,000 workers heing absorbed hy industry and another 5,000 in the Negev. Those worst hit will be woman, high school graduates and professionals, he predicted. His office does not know whether it would be possible to find alternative work for 25,000 employees, if this were indeed the number made jobless.

Katz said industry also was likely to be affected by a drop in orders, making it more difficult for the sector to absorb job seekers rendered unemployed by the moves.

Katz echoed Gafny's call for careful and exact planning and prediction before taking decisions on development hudgete, though in priociple he favours the proposal to cut them in order to restrain economic activity.

National Insurance Institute director-general Rafi Roter told The Post that the institute's unsimployment pay reserves are full and could suffice for a long period. It is estimated that the reserves total more than IL15b. In the institute's unemployment fund, because full employment has meant the money has remained virtually untouched. Workers would not be forced to move from the North to the South to find work if unemployed at the threst of losing unemployment pay. Roter

Slowing down the economy is a task of nstlonal importance. Transport Minister Haim Landau told The Post last night. "Local patriotism" by ministers was unthinkable if inflation is to he contaioed and the balance of payments to be improved, he said, Landau pooh-poohed threats of unemployment, saying industry, bousing and Negev activity could absorb 40,000

Landau called for careful selection hased on criteria to be applied to approved investments for industry, including applications aiready in the pipeline. Real wages must he maintsined, though not increased, through 100 per cent compensation for price increases every three months, excluding rises resulting from increases in the world price of oil. Wage increasce should only he permitted in plants which could show increases in productivity — also a vital task.

Construction and Absorptice Minister David Levy asaid that he opposed policles which produce unemployment and hurt the poor. Nonotheless, the time had come to fight inflation because what was involved was "our existence and cur alone could employ another 10,000 workers to solve the housing problems of young couples and those elleible for ald.

Bank of Israel economists, who take a different line from the hank's top echelons, say it would be a mistake to slow down economic activity, which would return it to stagnation after two years of growth. They pointed out that this stagnation iasted for several years before the reawakening. These economists prefer a change of the employment etructure which would curb domestic demand while Increasing productivity and keep growth at 6-7 per cent a year. They also say it is by no means clear that productivity will slow down in the coming years as a result of recession in the West. They also find it difficult to believe that there will be a drop in economic activity in the industrial world over a long period. Thus they advocate working towards s 'package deal' wage, price and tax freeze, and st the same time preventing, at all costs, any at-tsck on the two primary goals of Isrsel's economy - Juli employment and growth. These economists also foresee a slowdown in the flow of foreign capital to Israei if steps are takeo to restrain the economy. This would he a blow to efforts to cover the import surplus io the balance of psyments. Meanwhile, it appears that Ehrlich backs proposals to cut IL10b. from the government development programmes, but is against Aridor's suggestion to approve only IL1h.-2h. out of IL10b. in applications for development support from industrialists that are already in the pipeline. Industry, Trade and Tourism Minister Gideon Patt, who is abroad. left a letter supporting the cuts in government development budgets.

Shostak won't aid MDA as Americans cut funds

By ALAN ELSNER Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. - Delegations from the U.S. and South Africa of the Friends of the Magen David Adom failed to convince Health Minister Eliezer Shostak to provide emergency funding to the faltering medical organization, it has been reported.

An executive member of MDA said the Amaricana aiso refused to provide emergency funds for MDA or resume the regular flow of money for MDA'e operating hudget, which they stopped last April.

Last Sunday, representatives of all MDA hranches voted to close down after Rosh Hashana if emergency aid was not forthcoming by then. The source said that the failure of the Americans to squeeze a commitment out of Shostak made the possibility of this threat "much more

The delegations met with MDA officials and with Shostak and Doron Elhanani, chairman of the interministerial committee that recently presented a report on the state of the organization. At the end of their visit on Thursday, the delagations issued a statement calling on the govern-ment to urgently fund MDA's medical services. They said they would re-evaluate their methods of contributions and finance during the changeover period until Eihanani'a recommendations, which they support, can be implemented.

The Elhanani report called for greater governmental participation in financing MDA and recommanded that policy-making he transferred from the executive committee, made up of volunteere, to the professional staff heeded by the director-general.

The Jerusalem Post has learned from MDA sources that one impertant cantributory factor to the organication's present erisis which has already led to three branches ctosing with several more en the verge of collapse — was the stoppage of funds from the U.S. last April. Until then, MDA received $45,-000 each month to halp finance ita sperating expenses. Part of the reason for the funds hait, the source said, was the adverse publicity MDA had received, with officials suspected of misappropriation of

However, the cutoff was also partly motivated hy a 'personal dis-pute' between Israeli and local officials in tha New York office of the Friends of MDA. Ben Saxe, executive vice-director of Friends of MDA, who is head of the Naw York office, declined to be interviewed by The Post.

On August 16, after pressure had been applied from Israel, the source said, a telegram was received saying that $90,000 instead of $180,000 had been sent to the Health Ministry and not to MDA headquarters, as a one-time payment. The ministry passed the money on to MDA when it was received.

The acurcs said that none of thase issuee had bean resolved during the visit and that the monthly payments would not he renewed until tha Elhanani report was implemented which could take months. Givat Ram stadium site 'makes most sense,' gov't source says

By ABRAHAM BABINOVICH Jarusalam Post Reporter

The Hebrew University stadium at Givat Ram is the only alternativa to the proposed Shuafat stadium site "that makes sanse," according to a sourca ciose to the govarnment com-mittse studying possible stadium

The Givat Ram site, one of three under examination, has become an increasing focus of attention since earth work was stopped at Shuafat iast month in the wake of objections by Orthodox residents in northern Jarusaiem. Its accessibility by several road arteries, the absence of adjoining residential areas, the availability of parking in the adjoining government centre, and the fact that it already exists, have made it acem to many as a logical choica for a football stadium.

The university, however, has opposed the notion. University President Avraham Harman is reported to fear the impact on the university campus if the stadium ts opened to thousands of football fans every week. Harman, who is presently abroad, has declined to take a public position on the issue. In an interview hefore his departure, he said "the matter has never been broached to the university by any official body." Informed sources eay he is strongly opposed to the idea. However, at least one prominent member of the university board of governors has recommended that the stadium he given up to foothall - if the municipality huilds student sports facilities on the Mount Scopus campus where the bulk of the student body will soon he concentrated. There are plans for such facilities but the university has no funds to build them.

Although it is psriodically used for Independence Day or other ceremonies, it is virtually never used for epectator sports. A municipal official said. however, that its track and field are used almost every day hy unlvarsity and high school students as part of physical educatioo programmes.

Some authorities claim the etadium is poorly hullt for spectator sports hecause the seata are too far from the field. Planners, however, have suggested the possibility of demolishing the existing atadium if nead he and huilding a more vertical structure whose aeats would be closer to the field.

The original plan for the stadium by the late architect, Yoaef Klarwein, envisaged doubling its capacity by the addition of grandstands. The field was hullt ac-cording to "Olympic" standards, meaning that all athletic events normally held at a world olympics could be held there.

One of the objections to Givat Ram as that the public could easily look into the field from surrounding slopea without paying. A municipal planner said yesterday, however, that this could be easily solved by construction of grandstanda and planting of trees.

The stadium alternatives are being examined by a committee headed hy Deputy Minister Yoram Aridor. The committee was aet up after Prime Miniater Menahem Begin interceded at the request of his Agudat Ylarael coalition Kollek to suspend work at Shuafat while an alternative alte is sought.

The beleaguered Koliek, who had been standing virtually alone on Shuafat against intense pressure, readily accepted the way out offered

Although Kollek has warned that he will atart the bulldozers working again at Shuafat if a satisfactory alternative is not found within 60 days, it is considered highly unlikely that he will attempt to return there.

The mayor said in an interview last week that he was not opposed to Givat Ram in principle - "I'm not opposed to any site' — but that there were objective difficulties.

He questioned for instance.

whether accurity officials would walcome the government centre being turned into a mass parking area on Saturdays.

For years, Koilek had sald publicly that the university refused per-mission for use of the stadinm because the donor had stipulated that there be no Sabbath play. It emerged only recently that there was no such stipulation hy the donor who in fact was not Orthodox. Asked why he had been shouting "shahhas" in vain, Kollek said he had been informed of the alleged stipulation by the university. "I don't know where he got that," saio a university ofticial. The fact remains, howovar, that the univarsity never hothered to refute the claim over the years.

A Natorai Karta leader said last week that his sect would prohably accept Glvat Ram as a football stadium providing that games were not played on the Sabbath. business deals "as and when it pleases," claim senior officials in the Industry, Trade and Tourism Ministry. The diamond sector's reports on exports are not ragarded as reliable hy government officials, who also think the $800m. credit the industry receives from the Bank of Israel is out of proportion to the reported annual exports of $1.2b.

If the annual export figures are to be believed, officials say, than they imply that it takes about eight months to process a diamond, far more than ministry economists are prepared to believe. But the income tax authorities adopt a tough line with diamond merchants who do not keep books, director of state revenue administra-tion. Uriei Linn, told The Jarusalem claima the diamond merchants have never heen given any exemption from the requirement to keep books and that the law relates to them as it does to others.

Bank of Israei economists told The Post that after some slight freezing of the price of worked stones on the world market, there is now a recovery. Reacting to this, Israeli diamond merchante have hegun huilding up their stocks, reversing the situation of last year when they cut back on holdings. Bank officials also point to a rising in increasingly large quantities. This, thay say, is turning at least some of the diamond polishers into diamond traders, with the hank giving them low interest loans to finance trading, rather than the polishing for which the loans are in-

Bank of Israel foreign exchange director Yosef Sarig said that diamonds are lodged with the hank and are only released against proper documents, but there is nothing to stop diamond traders from leaving them in the bank's vaults as long as

Linn pointed out that failure to keep books carries in its wake a tax hite of 20 per cent rather than 10 per cent at aource, the imposition of higher advance tax payments, cancellation of rafunds on employer's tax and the imposition of higher tax rates than are pald by those who do keep books.

A special committee, similar to countless others established in the past, is now examining the issue of the diamond industry's failure to keep proper books. Set up hy the Ministerial Economic Committee, the new body includes deputy attorney-general Yoram Bar-Seia. income tax commissioner Dov Niger and Yosef Perimutter, controller of diamonds in the Industry. Trade and Tourism Ministry. Recommendations are due to be euhmitted to the Ministerial Economic Comtrend to re-export unworked stones mittee in a few weeks.

HUNGARIAN Jews call it Pitcha. Polish Jews call it Galler. It is also known as Pilsa. Fisnoga and Sulze, but when you boil it down, it's plain old calf's foot jelly.

Unaesthetic to the eye, it tastes much better than it looks and comes within the category of traditional Jewish delicacles. When served up on fastive occasions, it is usually set over sliced hard-boiled eggs to give it a more festive appearance, but those who care more about its flavour than its eye appeal have bay leaves and black pepper corns breaking through the shimmering surface. Personally, I can't ablde it on its own, but find it quite plasant to the palate when surrounded on all sides by chopped liver.

No Ashkenazi simha is complete without liberal servings of chopped liver, and lt's almost always on the menu in traditional Jewish restaurants. Even restaurants specialising in Eastern Jewish cuisine bave begun to include kaved kaizutz (as distinct from gshakte leber or chopped liver) on the menu. Gourmet cooks wouldn't dream of making this dish with any basic ingredient other than goose-liver. The average Yiddishe Mama is content with chicken liver, and the professional caterers who are out to make a profit by cutting their overheads, uss much cheaper beef liver. The ratio of hard-boiled eggs and fried onions both influence the taste and etretch the volume. Our mothers and grandmothers used to fry the liver and onions in schmaltz, but these days, cooks often can't by bothered rendering poultry fat to schmaltz and usually make do with oll. It's simply not the same. In Israel, it's very easy to make schmaltz because most of the poultry shops sell frozen fat which defrosts quickly and has already been clsaned. The pedantic cook only has to rinse it under the tap before putting it in the pot with water, onions and spices. A kilo of frozen chicken fat will produce four large jars of schmaltz.

Gefilte fish create even more cooking controversies than chopped liver. Prepared by a Rumanian cook, they're splcy. The Russians liks them sour; and in Polish and Hungarian kitchens, the sweeter the better. In Europe and Israel, carp is the most popular finned and scaled creature for both boiled and gefilte fisb, but in countries where carp is rare or nonexistent, gefilte fish mixtures include two or three varieties of fish such as parch, cod, pike, bream or haddock. My mother always combined perch and cod, and I never tasted carp until I was in Paris several years ago.

The gefilte fish mixture needs something to . give it body so that it won't fall apart during the cooking process. Some cooks use breadcrumbs; others prefer matzo meal and there are many who would not deviate from white bread or hallah soaked in water.

In the strictest sense, gefilte fish are stuffed fish, i.e. thick slices of fish filled with a fish ball mixture. You have to be a really good cook to do this properly, which is why fish patties bave replaced the genuine article. The fasteet way to prepare gefilte fish, with the least likelihood of mishap, is not to maks small round or oval patties, but to make large loaves which are sliced when they are cold.

Names mean a lot in Jewish traditional food. Stuffed derma does not have the same connotation as kishke; and a cream cheese pancake or omelette in no way compares with blintz. By the way, if you say blintz to a Hungarian Jew, it will bave less meaning than palichenka, which is more or less the same thing. And if you're being served crepes in a French kitchen, you'll immediately recognize the similarity to blintzes.

The many tastes of tradition

Greer Fay Cashman explores the mysteries of the Jewish kitchen.

Here again, there are diverse opinions on how the traditional blintz should be made. Throw a group of blintz experts into a room and you'll bear arguments about whether the batter should include regular milk, sour cream, buttermilk or no milk at all. They'll also disagree about the number of eggs and the type of flour, and wbether or not the mixture should include sugar. Then they'll argue about whether the blintz sheets should be fried in butter, oil or margarins. It goes without saying that thers will be differences of opinion on what kind of cheese to use and what should be added to the cheese. Whether to fold or wrap the blintzes is another matter of dispute. The best cheese blintzes I've so far eaten in Israel are prepared in the Alaska Coffee Shop in Jsrusalem's Jaffa Road, but don't try them unless you have a sweet tooth.

Among the most traditional of Jewish foods is cholent, known in Hebrew as hamin. This slow-cooking Sabbath stew is widely enjoyeed in both Ashkenazi and Sephardi communities, but the recipes are worlds apart. An Ashkenazi cholent usually comprises beef, lima beans, onions, barley, potatoes... and deliciously crisp kishke. Central Europeans often use kasha (groats) instead of barley. In a Sephardi cholent, potatoes are omitted in favour of rice. Cholent is usually left in the oven for some 18-20 bours, and develops a more soupy consistency if left on top of the

The most memorable cholent I ever had, not so much because of the taste as the atmosphere surrounding the meal, was in Cairo. Some years before the Peace Treaty, I spent a Sabbath in what was left of the poor Jewisb sector of Cairo. Most of the Jews remaining in the area were observant, but because they were so few in number, they lacked proper Jewish educational facilities. In an attempt to solve this problem, Shabbat was celebrated on a community rather than a family basis. The ladies of the congregation prepared an enormous choient every Friday and consigned it to the synagogue stove. After services on Saturday morning, the whole congregation consumed the choisnt on the synagogue premises, and the elders passed on their wisdom to the young boys while the women listened. Every once in a whils, one of the boys was called on to read. This ensured slience from the women's quarters, as no mother wanted to miss out bearing her son. Everyone stayed in the synagogue till nightfall. A child was dispatched into the street to fetch some fragrant leaves for the Havdala prayer, after which the people went back to their homes.

Kugel - pudding to those who don't speak Yiddish- is another all-time Jewish favourite. Lockshen or noodie pudding is probably the most popular because it lends itself to so many varieties. Made with cheese, it is a meal on its own. The spicy version is a good accompaniment for the meat course; and if it's sweet, with raisins, dates, apples or other fruit, it is an excellent and filling dessert. If you see it on the menu in an Israell restaurant, it will probably be listed as

When I was a child, my mother made her own noodles. All the chairs in the kitchen were covered with freehly laundered sheets, and the noodle pastry was draped across the back of the chairs until it was well and truly dry. When it was almost stiff, it was placed on a flat surface, rolled and finely sliced on the diagonal. Packaged noodles and powdered chicken soup take all the joy out of traditional cooking.

People who are not completely au fait with the Jewieh kitchen mistakenly believe that kneidlach are strictly synonymous with matzo balls. In actual fact, kneidlach are purely and simply dumplings. But while we're on the subject of matzo balls, there are schools of thought which dictate that they should be light and fluffy, and others which insist that they be miniature cannon balls. Although they're traditionally eaten with chicken soup, they aleo go down very well with beetroot borscht. I experimentally discovered that cold matzo balls dipped in soya sauce are utterly delicious.

With that oblique reference to China, we come to kreplech, which if the truth be known, are Jewisb wantons sans pork. If you're maklng your own from scratch, the pastry is the sams as that for noodles. Make enough and you can kill two birds with one stone.

In the cookle corner are hoizenbluzen which literally translated means blowing pants. A universal morsel in both Ashkenazi and Ssphardi communitiss, hoizenbluzen known in some circles as chrust is deep fried dough sprinkled with powdered sugar and cinnamon. Ashkenazim cut the dough into the diamondshaped strips with a slit in the middle. One end of the diamond is pulled through the slit before frying. The dough blows up in the hot oil-hence the name. Sephardim use longer strips of dough which they roll up like a Swiss roll. In the oil, this blossoms into a buge cab-bage rose. The Sephardim, unlike the Ashkenazim, do not drain the oil from the finished product, which makes it tougher on the digestion.

A comparatively modern Jewish tradition is bagel with lox -and cream cheese too, if you don't care about calories. This is a new world contribution which bas not yet caught on completely in all the countries of Jewish settle-

Israel has also made a contribution. On my first visit here, prior to making aliya, I ordered a schnitzel ln a Tel Aviv restaurant. After the first bite, I summoned the waltress to complain that this was definitely not what I ordered. "But you asked for schnitzel," she protested. "Yes" I agreed, " and this Isn't schnitzel." She stared at me blankly, then shrugged her shoulders and turned away to attend to another customer. How was I to know that veal r chnitzel was almost unattainable in Israel? Since then, I've learned to live with chicken or turkey schnitzel, but every now and then, my taste buds water not for a genuine Wiener Schnitzel, but one of those huge tender Jewish schnitzels on the bone.

Maybe, someone will submit it as an entry in the Israel Cuisine Competition in September, and I'll be lucky enough to get a blte.

HAVING GROWN up in a large Oriental family, helping my Iraqi-born mother prepare these recipes, I learned the eccrets of success that cook books never tell.

"If you are an experienced cook you never have to measure spices,' my mother confidently said to me, You measure with your eyes and instincts." This was the most difficult thing to Isarn when cooking my mother's traditional food. She has experienced syes and fingers for seasoning food and her dishes are alwaye successful and delicious.

In traditional Sephardi families, food preparation is as important as the actual ritual of sating. The mixed blessing of large families puts an extra burden on the homemaker, who must prepare nourishing and tasty food dally.

Through generations of ex-perience, dishes have evolved which due to the ease of preparatioo and delicious teste have become part of a culinary culture. The recipes are comprised of two-pot dishes. One dish contains cooked white rice, and the other has a protein (meat or fish or beans) cooked with freeh vegetables (which in Israel can be found all year round) and a seasoned sauce, which is eerved on the rice.

These recipes can be used with equal success for dinner parties and iarge family gatherings. They have a delicious sweet-and-sour taste or are hot and spicy. They have a definite oriental flavour, leaving you feeling full and satisfied. Guests today are as appreciative of these dishes as we were as children.

THAT I LOOK TEN YEARS YOUNGER BAKALA (HAKE) FOR A TASTY DISH AND A YOUNGER LOOK

My exact age isn't important, but I can say that my daughter's in the Army. They say I look younger, and that surprises me because I'm not sold on exercises or slimming, nor on cosmetics or various diets. My husband says it's all due to Bakala fish. I like to prepare Bakala in many ways, all tasty and fresh, and they go down well with all the family because they're

I know that Bakala contains all the vitamins and is low in calories. That's why, if they asked me, I would definitely recommend Atlantic's Bakala.

For me, life's much easier now that Atlantic markets Bakala schnitzel, Fillet Bakala and Bakala flakes.

THIS SHOULD have been the easiest assignment I evor had — to describe my mother'e Manchester Jewleh cooking in tha "Thirtiee. Fried fieh.

That was it. We are fried fish twice a day five daya a week and once on Friday. (Shahhat was celehrated with chicken or meat.) Wa ate it ungarnlahed, the Manchester Jewieh idea of two veg heing a packet of crisps. Most houecholds, however. dispensed with such refinements and. I must admlt. I myself never fancled the idea after my pal, Matty Cohen, got a packet with 17 portions of ealt twisted in hluc paper, and no

The fish was first-rate — plaice. cod, hallhut and haddock. There are some who swear by a nice plece of hallbut and, indeed, among the congratulations sent to Winston Churchili when he was honoured with the Garter in 1953 was a note from a Blackbool fishmonger attached to "the best halibut I could find." The cognoacentl, however, agree that there's nothing to beat a piece of plaice which has been well and truly "rulned" by being cooked the Manchester Jewish way - dabbed about vaguely in flour and fried in

From tims to time, the housewife, inspired hy a fit of craativity, would vary the menu by substituting for the eternal fried fish a platter of chopped and fried fish or gefillte tieh. In hard times the lowly herring. in all its varieties would make an appearance (the puhs round our way aupplied herring and black bread free to tha few Jews who patronised them). Tinned asimon, on the other hand, dld not necessarily signify that a long-lost Auetralian coueln had remembered us in hie will; ealmon was oheap and satisfied a craving for "something tasty" common to all the working-class. Richard Hoggart bas put it in a nutsheli in his classic work, "The Usce of Literacy." After tea at the weekends, he writes, "the middens up the back had a fine topcoat of empty salmon and fruit tins." This is a reference to those all-time favouritea, tinned fruit salad (with the prized charries) and tinned plneapple rings. Freah fruit was occasionally hought from hawkers who travelled the streets crying their wares with their cheeky gohhlcdegook:

Apples o pound peors. Grapes we ave none, Buy me last one and I'll give yer six -

Say numder word and I'll 'll yer with the senies -Apples a pound peors.

Some of these hawkers, including old Isaac Cohen, who sold fish from a horse-and-cart (in what I have come to recognize as Chagall'a style). stabled their beasts undar our saud and ever since I have associated horsey smells like those which used to stray up through the floorboards, with the odour of sanctity. (Later we all movad to the hall of what had been St. John's parochial school and the members would make caaual reference to "dovening at St. John's' which I always found unsettling.)

The fine plehald dray-horsee which delivered Dowd's renowned minsral waters to the neighbourhood grocery stores hardly eeemed to oclong to the same species ae Isaac Cohen's patient old nag. They were superb beasts, eo much so that Dowd's had adopted them as the firm's trade mark. This had unfortunate connotations for me, at least. I never felt comfortable looking at the Dowd's Cream Soda lahal while drinking the fizzy, foaming palelemon-coloured beverage (though for many years afterwards I thought a phyalologist was someone who worked for Dowd's). The horses on the lahel are probably the roason I preferred the brown local brow. dandellon-and-burdock, the bright orange-coloured Tizer or the axotic dark-red fluid called Vimto which today is available only in Manchester

They didn't look remotsly as if thay could have been produced by a cart-horse. In those days, shopping was carried out mostly hy small hoye who were sent off to the corner grocery with a list and a request to put it on the hill "and me muvver'll pay on Friday." A frequent rejoindar to this optimistic overture was, "You go home and tell yer muvver that the tick department is closed for repairs."

The Jewish grocerles were well worth a visit, however, if only for their superh sights and smells — the great red cast-iron wheel on the coffee-grinder, the harreis of herring, the glass-topped hoxee of hiscuits, the sacks of eugar, beans and peas, the pungent hundles of firewood and cans of lamp-oil.

Oddly enough, I never connected the ohligatory biscult display with real, edible confectionery. I thought that all hiscults were hroken hiscults, the sort we invariably hought since they were considerably cheaper, and I further confueed mattera by regularly asking for Typhoid tea, descerated coconut and, on one unforgettably shameful occasion, a breast had.

We were never sent to the butcher. The negotiations there took on the aspect of summit meetings and had to he handled by the muvvers themselves who were formidable enough and deaperate enough to demand the best cuts available and then settle down to haggling over the credit terma. Eventually, the meat (whether brisket, pickle meat, the mysteriousiy-termed bola, saveioys or the world's worst wurst) would be carried home in triumph and consumed with lashings of piccallili, HP sauce or pickled onlons and, oc-casionally, chips. Now there are chips and chips. I'm not referring to your affete, dainty couthern twig (pomme paille, pomme allumatte) but the no-nonsense northarn 14mm square monolith (pomme ponf nauf)
— the basic ingredient of the chip butty. Eaten sideways It produces the characteristic wide emile of your Manchester man - known hy lts dctractors as the gormless look.

The feast of Succot would ace Manchaster's Jews huddled in their deseri tabornacles, lashed by the rain and huffeted by the wind but comforted hy the knowledge that the finest disb in the world was about to ha aerved - kreplach in chicken soup. For days before, the paper-thin sheets of dough would be hung over chairbacks and apread over tebles, waiting for the meat filling to be prepared. Then the dough would be haetroot-based elngemachs, together with ingber, a ginger-dish, enhanced the Pessah table, whila on Shahbat and on the other festivale, tha housewives would produce the rather gritty kuchel, a sort of croae hetwean a cake and a hiscuit. Not only on Peasah, out the whole year round, Rakusen's matzo, the packet bearing a reassuring picture of the epecimen of his aignature, would be consumed as frequently as oread, If not more so.

Bagele and platzele (round flat buns with dimples) wars raserved as a special treat for Sunday mornings when they would ha earvad with coffae, the only time we drank it. The bagel, needless to say, was a real hagel - a thing of beauty and a joy for evar - and bore no resemblanca to the dreadfully daformad paredy which Israelis have to put up with On the other hand, we took them seriously, not like the uninhibited Americans with their frivolous Coexistence Bagel Shops ("Kant is to Hegel as hole is to hagel") and

Johann Sebastian Bagel restaurants. Half way through the decade, things had become very grim indeed. Seventy years carller, Ruckin had asked in Sacame and Lilice, "Which of us is to do the hard and dirty work for the rest and for what pay? Who is to do the pleasant and clean work and for what pay?" He could never have contemplated a situation where there was no work at all available for one-third of the breadwinners, and no pay apart from a totally inadequate dole.

In no time at all we had adjusted to going without Vimto and Tizer and learned to rely on the kitchen tap or the granite drinking fountains; their cast-iron cups attached hy chains dispensed cool Corporation pop fresh water. It was only rarely we could buy Walls ice cream from the "Stop Me and Buy One" man, hut we soon learned to swipe ice from the loeding hays of the Lancashire Hygianic Dairiss.

Kids are nearly always hungry at the best of times. We were hungriar than most and I don't think that the school would have dared to feature an egg-and-spoon race on sports day — the eggs would never have made it to the finishing line.

The playground wits were forever talling food jokes ("Dld you hear ahout tha man who stole some rhubarh? He was put into custardy.") and the all-consuming interest in food was reflected, too, in the mangled versions of school hymns which were common ourrency.

"Most highly favoured lady"
hacame "most highly flavoured gravy" and the Maypoia Dairy chain must have been delighted with the free advertising they got at Christ-mas when all the kids sang "Oh come all ye faithful/Buttar from the Maypols." An unregulted lover could not have serenaded his duenna with more feeling than Manohester

There is o happy land, far, far Where they have bread and jam

Three times a day Oh, how the angels yell When they hear the dinner hell There is a happy land, far, far

Even among the grown-ups, a sort of hlack humour about food slowly evolved. One classic has a widow telling her neighbour the details of her husband's passing.

"E went off to the allotmebt to get a cahhage for dinner. 'E were gone a tidy while and I thought 'e'd gone to t'puh. Then a hohhle came and told ma 'e'd dropped dead inside t'allotment. "Eee, Mrs. Ramsbottom," the neighbour said. "You must've 'ad a ahock. What did you do?" "Do? Well, I opened a fin of peas." The worst-hit cases among us suffered from rickets, and no wonder. A woman once threw some light on the vitamin-deficient diet of the poor when she told Wilfred Pickles she had once worked in a luvly house belonging to vary rioh people. "You can tell how wealthy they were," ahe confided. "They even had frutt on the sideboard when no one was Hollow chests, domed foreheads and bow-legs were so common that some weird things happened during football matches, stunted players dodging through the bow-legs of higger boys. Others were not only undersized, but dressed in hand-medown clothae which were much too big for tham and, it was rumoured, that if they fall down, when they got up again they'd find their hreeches wera hack to front, so that the poor huggers didn't know whether they were coming or going.

Our ealvation lay in the Mancheeter Jewish Soup Kitchen, off Exchange Street, which I only recently discovered was funded by Marks and Spencers. Once inside the door, with its stone superscription "Philanthropic Hall," we joined the good-natured queue.

I chose the soup, a thick concoction of potatoes, meat and barley served in a can together with practically half a loaf of hread. The mushroome were cartainly not tinned, in fact there were no mushrooms

My companion, too, selected the soup. In fact everybody selected the soup or went hungry. Some kids became so used to aating with a spoon that, in later life, they became quite pockmarked after using the un-

Ready-to-eat food makes its mark

WHAT THE Colonel did for chickens in Kentucky, Milosan now doce for them in Israel — with one difference: it not only fries them but cooks, cans and processes them into a variety of soups, ready-to-eat dishes and gravies. The "Mill" linee of canned and frozen poultry foods have become this year's novelty.

Milosan is the youngest off-spring of the Miluot family, the concern founded some 20 years ago and owned by 26 kibbutzim in the Galilee. It does practically everything for the kibbutzim, from processing cotton seeds to packing and exporting their truits and vegetables, Milosan came to life as production grew in the corporation's chicken slaughterhouse. and a new outlet was needed for the processed meat.

The Milosan venture was considered during by experts, as faw people believed there was enough demand in the country for frozen, ready-to-eat food. The feeling was that it would be a lost cause against homemade food. That "Jewisb mother" claim that "nothing-la-good-enough-for-my-famliy-but-what l-prepare-with-my-own-hands" had kept the Israeli processed food market on a slow burn.

However, Milosan is apparently doing the job. The company started operating a little over a year ago and has aiready doubled production: from 1,800 tons in 1978, it passed the 2,000 tons mark in June, and it expecte 1979 production to reach over 4,000 tons. Exporting has so far been low, as competition abroad has proved hard to beat:
"Take the U.S., for instance. Food

manufacturers can get all the raw material they'll ever need at much cheaper prices than us. They bave simply no reason to shop abroad. So we have turned to Enrope — England, Hollsnd, Belgium, and others, with greater auccess," explained managing director Arye

And what has Milosan brought to the traditional Jewish kitchen? It has two kinds of production lines: canned and frozen food. "Mill" brand cans range from 100 grams to 10kg alzes and offer coid chicken and turkey meat for slicing, soupe, spreads and a variety of ready-to-eat meals which include some national dishes such as American chicken and corn, the Mexican chili con carne, and the Hungarian chicken paprikash.

The company's greatest pride is that It has managed to keep away

SAVE YOUR arteries this holiday season with a bappy blending of good nutrition without overfeeding and without sacrificing the pleasures of

We don't have to walt for the bolidays to overeat. We do'lt every Sabbath, if not every day of the week. With the abundance in the market no matter what the price, things are not what they used in be when you ate to live. Now we live to eat. It is believed that one reason the they have alwaye had a bealthy diet. Kashrut no doubt bas bsiped ellminate the disease-bearing foods such as plg and shelifleb. But nowadaye, the high rate of beart dis-ease among Jews points to overeating - large portions of the traditional type of the food known as Jewieh cooking. It is no doubt delicious: heavy with fat and sugar — kugel, knishes, kishke, choient, kneldel, cholisbes, pancakes, latkes, berekes, eweet and sour dishee, gefilte fish, borsbt, zimmus full of sugar, and chopped liver full of "schmaltz." Not to mention the cakes and cookles with sour and sweet cream.

How can one reduce the calories, the choiesterol, the triglicerides in the food one loves and still find life worth living? It can be done. First, control the portions and half your troubles are over.

The leanest meat is fatter than chicken, turkey or fish. Try boiling a slice of lean meat in soup, and chill it. You will find a layer of calories nn top, which should be removed.

from artificial colouring and flavours, as well as preservativea. Thus, it can claim to manufacture real "homemade" taate food. "Instead of using chemicals, we have turned to a new technique in food processing," chief technologist Dr. Ariette Cohen sald. "We put the food through an instant and very stroog temperature change - freezing or boiling - and then we have the package scaled. This is enough to keep it absolutely sterile for at least the same period of time other canned has got no complaints. Ready-to-eat food can be a very convenient answer to a number of "problematic" situations, like unexpected guests, an especially hungry husband or picnics. Still, Milosan's products bave not yet found their way to many bousewives' hearts. "I think it's a problem of culture," held Meir, manager of one of Haifa's supermarkets. "The frozen, ready meals are too new, people mistrust them a bit. The average bousewife would rather go for something she already knows." Others feel that price is the big handicap. Milosan is well aware that is hot and tasty and so far, the chef

although the recommended price for a half-kilo can of chicken soup is IL17.40, the item sells for almost double price in many eupermarkets. Turkey goulash with sauerkraut, which also comes in a balf-kilo can, is sold in many places at IL70, despite the recommended price of IL42.10. With frozen food packages. the case is even worse. Prices can change from one street corner to another, and Milosan recognizes there is simply no way they can keep an eye on everybody.

A young mother had this to say; "The food tastes good, the variety is encouraging, but the portions are just too small," according to Michal, mother of two. "One regular package is not enough to satisfy an aduit's appetite - and they are just a bit too expensive for somebody to pick up as much as she fanciee in the

Still, Milosan is marching onward, weighing every step carefully. Market researches are carried on before avery new item is Isunched. and the company checks the public's reaction to each new package

There is another target they are aiming st, explained Milosan's Dr. Cohen: "Paople frown at canned food, because they are used to consider it as "class B" food. To teil the truth, they were right because canned food always tasted peculiar, and could never pass for bome-made. We want to change this. Our food tastes as good as anyone could want. Life has become so very demanding for working mothers and bousewivea, that we feel they should be entitled to easier and shorter

RELAXING with a long, cool drink, especially in the company of good friends, is one of the more pleasurable aspects of a mild Israeli autumn, sithough infistionary trends tend to make even a cool drink a luxury, unless one confines two meals a day, five days a week oneself to water. with four women doing all the kitchen work and serving. The food

Some hotels are charging the outrageous price of IL30 for a small bottie of Coca Cols, and milk shakes fluctuate at between IL20 and IL40. Anything with sleohol obviously costs more. For some reason, iced coffee (without ice cream) is more expensive than hot coffee. Admittedly a glass holds more than a cup, but considering that leed coffee is usually orepared in bulk and that most of the contents are water, there is no basis for a price difference of IL10 and more.

Still within the budget are the sugar-sweet fruit drinks available at quick service bars. For IIA one can get a small glass of grape fuice or lemon juice. At least one klosk of this kino in Jerusalem's King George Street does not use artificial ad-ditives. I've been there on more than one occasion while the proprietor has put the grapee through the

In Tel Aviv, freshly prepared fruit drinks are the rage, particularly along Dizengoff or Ibn Gwirol. You can have a choice of mixed or individual fruits liquified before your eyes. A drop of milk to change the flavour also inflates the price.

Speaking of tea, Wissotzky has concocted a series of recipes to give an extra tang to iced tes. These inciude inter alia, several tes cocktails and punches. They are easy to prepare, and in most casea, fairly economical.

Here are two examples to whet your palate: Tea cocktall (serves 10)

Ingredients:

6 cups of cooled tea 3 cups of grape juice, orange juice, plum juice or lemon juice Sugar or syrup according to taste Assortment of dry or fresh fruit Crushed ice

1 large bottle of soda or lemonade Method:

Mix all ingredients except the last two. Place crushed ice in individual glasses. Add cocktail mixture and top with sods or lemonade.

Tea punch (serves 25) Ingredients: 6 tsps tea leaves 2 cups bolling water cuns cold water

I cup sugar ii cup iemon juice (undiluted) 3 bottles orange juice bottle red wine 2 bottles soda.

ice cubes 3 cups mixed fruits or peeled iemon segments Method:

Prepare tea with boiling water and sugar. Allow to cool for five minutes. Add lemon juics and cold water. In a separate bowl, soak the fruit in wins. At serving time, add the teasto the fruit and wine mixtures as well as the remaining ingredients.

Thirst-quenchers

Greer Fay Cashman raises her glass.

If you're partial to creme de menthe, try it in an lce cream sods. Put one dessertspoon of creme de menthe in a tall glass. Add a large scoop of vaniila ice cream, mix slightly and pour sods or lemonade over the top. For a creamier drink, use the same ingredients plus 8 glass of chilied milk. Put the ice cream, liqueur and milk in the blender. When it is smooth, pour into in-dividual glasses, add sods, and if you have a few mint leaves, let them flost on the top to add a more piquant flavour.

While you've got the blender out, make some nectar before you put It away. Take one large glass of fresh chilled orange juice. 1 small con-tainer of natural yogurt and 1 large fresb peach or 2 plums or 2 apricots, peeled, stoned and quartered. Place all the ingredients in the blender and blend till emooth.

The coolest of cool drinke is melting crushed ice. The Italians call it granita. In Israei, it's known as barad — which is also the word for hail, hence the origin of the name. Basically, It's flavoured ice, and it lasts s long time if you wait for it to melt. Some people consume it in its frozen form which is quite a shock to the system, with a decidedly cooling

If you want to make something similar at home, but you want it to be more nutritious, stew your favourite fruit, then rub it through a coarse sieve before you put it in the freezer. If your refrigerator coesn't have an automatic ice crusher, run the edge of an inverted spoon backwards and forwards across the surface of the ice. For quicker results, freeze the mixture in a plastic bag, and once it is frozen, bang it with a meat

Egg nogs and frappes slso go down well. You can use either s blender or a cocktail shaker; and if you have neither, an egg beater will also do the trick. For a etandard egg nog use four cups of cold milk, 2-3 eggs, 3 tablespoons of powdered sugar or honey. I teaspoon of vanilis. Blend, shake or beat them well together. Pour into glasses and sprinkle with nutmeg or cinnamon. For variety, you can add half s cup of fruit juice and or a jigger of cognac, rum or whisky to the ingredients before shaking them up to a froth.

Frappés are slso frothy, but not quite as calorific. Take I glass of mixed citrus julce, add I smail container of yoghurt, I egg white and 1 tablespoon of powdered sugar, Place all the ingredients in the blender or cocktail shaker. Blend or shake till. smooth. Pour half-way loto individual glasses. Top with soda.

Healthy feasting

Lilian Cornfeld watches her holiday weight:

Chicken fat is not so saturated as beef, and when rendered with onions and mixed with an equal quantity of oil, its saturation is greatly reduced, and cooking.

In baking, mix margarine or butter with oil. Three-quarters of cup of oil or less replaces a packet of margarine. Reduce the sugar content in cooking and baking. Mix a teaspoon of sugar with three eaccarinea to sweeten a pot of compote, borsht or tzimmes without sacrific-

Cut down on frying. Instead of frying fish, meatballs, etc. cover with tomato juice or vegetable juice, or some white wine. The alcohol evaporates in cooking, leaving just the taste. But avoid sweet winee which are high in calories.

Uss white cheese mixed with ieben instead of fat cheese with cream in blintzee, lasagne, spagbetti and noodie kugei.

Fruits and vegetables are not only delicious, but bave the virtue of cholesterol control; are low in calories and fat and high in nutritive and satisfaction valus. But pears and grapes are higher in calories than grapefruit or emall apples. Some people sit down and eat half a kilo of grapes, thinking "They are so healthy"; maybe they are - but in place of some regular foods, not in addition. Twelve grapes is a portion for a diabetic. My backetor neighbour makes a meal by blending fruits and eating them raw. He uses apples and pears, for a wonderful foods have achieved."

An additional result of such a technique is that cans come out spotlessly clean. Miloean used this to suggest to large customers a "new way of cooking": Heat the food and serve it directly from the can, and forget about pots and pans. It's quicker, cleaner and it takes a minimum of personnel to keep things

Milosan's bright dining ball is a good example of bow the system works. Some 240 workers receive

Reduce the calories in mayonnaise by blending with leben and berbs. One tablespoon of mayonnaise is over 100 calories. Lemon juice or vinegar with a drop of oil is only 10. Always add fat to your cooked vegetablee just before eerving. It, will give flavour while you use much iess. We are great bread eaters, especially of eweet halla, but a small potato is less fattening and healthier. Now for gefilte fisb: Mix your carp or "kassif" with "bakala" and egg-whites; perbaps only one yolk. Cut down on the fried onions.

One of the easiest "daisot" to prepare is made from semolina. Use one cup of semolina to five cups of boiling salted water, seasoned with chopped parsley and soup powder. You can eerve this in soup or with meat instead of potatoes. Chilled squares of this "solet" fried in garlic ie wonderful with chicken. Add a few tablespoons of this cooked semolina to cheese blintzee, or vegetables and cheese souffles, to prevent them from falling apart and reduce the number of eggs required.

Chopped liver need not be beavy with oll. If you steam a lot of onlone in a teaspoon of oil, you get a good flavour, when added to the chopped liver. Remember, onions are good for your beart; but chopped liver can be made, too, with a little chopped eggplant mixed into it. You hardly know the difference, and bealth-

If you must cook a "cholant" avoid the fat and flour kishke like a pest. Beans and barley are very bealthy and bave low cholesterol. A few chicken legs will give the cholent flavour.

Instead of pancakes, make a souffle: grate some potatoes, zuchini, onions and eggs and bake in a slightly greased pan.

Varenikes, knisbes, burekas can be made with potato dough: Mash four boiled potatoee with half a cup of flour and a teaspoon of baking powder. Season well, roll out and place squares on a greased pan, cover with a tablespoon of cheese or prepared "kusemet," or eggplant or chopped turkey. Pinch up the sides, brush with a little oil Deserts: After a beavy mest, fruit is best. But if you must have something with your coffee, let it be a small cookie and not a rich care.

Israel wins Davis Cup 2nd round

By JACK LEON Post Sports Reporter

RAMAT HASHARON. - Israel last night completed a 4-1 victory over Monaco here, in their second-round European zone Davis Cup ties for the 1980 competition, in an exact reversal of the cup score between the two countries in Monte Carlo in 1965.

The Israells will meet either Austria, Poland, West Germany or Switzerland next March in the third round. The draw will be made by the International Tennis Federation in London this week.

The match at Ramat Hasharon's tennis centre marked the first sporting competition between Israel and Monaco in this country. It was Israel's eighth Davis Cop win in 34 outings in the competition, and this is the third consecutive year in which she has reached the thirdround of the world-wide 52-nation

Israel's hero was their no.2 racquet, Shiomo Glickstein, 21, who won both hie singlee and took the doubles in partnership with Yair Werthelmer to give Israel an unassailable 3-0 lead in the five-match series.

Netanya Maccabi sets the pace in National League soccer after trailing 0-2 and 5-8 and then sharing the first eight games of the second, before succumbing 4-6. The 22-year-old Israeli — the grandson of the late Palestinian Labour leader Haim Arlosoroff - qualified as the team's No. 8 racquet by beating former champion Werthelmer in a play-off between them last week.

Arlosoroff, who constantly scored with breathtaking backband passing shots which left his opponent flat-footed, quickly lost the third set. However, he came back strongly in the fourth although Monegasque champion Balleret always managed to keep ahead, with his superb volleying showing up particularly well under pressure.

Israeli champion Glickstein, who had conceded eight games on Thursday in his straight-sets victory over the visitors' champion Balleret, was even more devastating last night as he overwhelmed hard-hitting baseliner Louis Borfiga 6-3, 6-1, 6-0 in about an hour, with a devastating display of aggressive termis. Glickstein has now won seven singles matches in his six Davis Cup outings

Irish Rugby Union OKs tour by

S. African team DUBLIN (AP). - Ireland'e Rugby Football Union on Friday night approved a tour by the multi-racial South African team despite govern-ment pressure to cancel the visit on the grounds it encourages apartheid. The union stressed in a statement that the inclusion of black players in the touring "Barbarian" squad represented "a far-reaching step forward in the elimination of racial discrimination in eport."

Prime Minister Jack Lynch's government swiftly responded to the move by warning it will carry out its pledge to halt the controversial tour, scheduled to start next month. A government spokesman declined to teil newsmen how this would be done and said: "This is a matter for the government to decide."

However, the government can prevent the South African players entering the Irish Republic under the country's "Aliens Act", a 44-year-old law that gives the government the power to exclude almost anyone it wanta.

The union has said that it could not cancel its invitation to the Barbarians because it was only part of a collective invitation by the four rugby unions in the British Isles. The other three are the English, Scottish and Welsh unions. British rugby authorities bave refused requeste by the London government to canbel their legs of the proposed Barbarians tour, despite widespread condemnation by Black African states and sports

Berkowitz to stay play for Maccabi

TEL AVIV. - Israel and Tel Aviv Maccabi basketball star Mickey Berkowitz will continue to play for Tel Aviv Maccabl in the coming season, after it was earlier thought likely that he would play professionally in the U.S. Berkowitz has, in recent weeks, made several trips to the U.S. for trials with American professional squads. As of the end of last week he had received no firm offers to sign for an American National Basketball Association team. The agreement with Tel Aviv Maccabi was finalized to the satisfaction of both sides, according to a joint statement by the club and player, and Berkowitz will immediately join the Maccabi hoopsters in training. This brought to an end a disputs between Berkowitz and Tel Aviv

Maccabi, who refused to release the player from his contract with the club, although Berkowitz claimed that according to the terms of his contract be could join a professional

Nottingham Forest drops top spot in English 1st Division

LONDON. - Nottingham Forest lost their place at the top of the English first division when they crashed 3-1 away to Norwich yesterday.

Manchester United new leader

The new leaders are Manchester United, who beat Derby 1-0 at home. Forest, the European champions, went into yesterday's match having dropped only one point in five league games. But their usually tight defence conceded goals to Kevin Reeves and Justin Fashanu inside four minutes late in the first balf. Kelth Robson increased Forest's misery with a third goal in the 57th minute as Norwich re-discovered the form which brought them wins ln their opening three league matches. Manchester United, one of only two teams left unbeaten in the first division, laboured to beat lowly Derby. The only goal of the game came

Inflation: out of control

NOTHING INFLATES like inflation.

The double digit inflation that was engineered by the previous government as a way of paying for the economic aftermath of the Yom Kippur War and perpetuated and accelerated by the present government, largely as an expression of political and administrative fecklessness, has now grown into a beast that feede on itself.

There is broad consensus that the Finance Ministry's deficit spending that has now reached a level of close to IL5 billion a month (!) continues to be the main fuel etoking inflation. But this deficit financing cannot by itself explain the order of magnitude of the runaway process. The 8.4 per cent rise in the August coet-of-living index, no matter how one looks at It, bespeaks an annual inflation rate of around 100 per cent.

It is quite clear that this rate is now being fed by the personal behaviour of most Israelis who have correctly read the signals emanating from the government and are frantically or cold bloodedly taking whatever protective action is available to them to safeguard their own standards of living.

The trouble ie that the availability to the individual of sucb protective measures is in itself a major inflationary factor. But It would seem that even the most patriotic of Israelis is determined — and understandably so — to protect his own selfinterest even at the cost of causing harm to the national economic interest. For he correctly perceives that the government itself is not about to do anything meaningful to protect that national interest.

True, the average Israeli has been well protected against the ravages of devastating inflation by the world'e most ramified system of indexing and linking. But the atmosphere in the street and in the shops — and one would suspect in the government, too - is distinctly one of "eat, drink and be merry for tomorrow we

Today, the problem of inflation is a political rather than an economic one. The mechanisms for fighting inflation, even the wildly spiralling type that has befallen Israel, are known. The problem is that the populace - producers, consumers and manipulators - have lost all confidence in the government's desire or ability to do anything about it.

Responsibility for this total breakdown in confidence is usually laid at Finance Minister Ehrlich's feet, and there can be little doubt that he is responsible, to a large degree, for losing control. It is unfair, however, to point the finger solely or today even primarily at Mr. Ehrlich because his primary responsibility is largely a thing of the past. Moreover, being an astute politician, he offered his resignation from the Finance Ministry on more than one occasion, but was turned down by Mr. Begin.

Responsibility for keeping him on and for failing to appoint in his place a political leader of strength wbo would show promise of being able to shoulder the burden, therefore lies squarely with Prime Minister Begin.

The difficulties confronting Mr. Begin are obvious. A strong finance minister would have to be given the power from the outset to cut down the political independence and the deficitstoking activities of Cabinet Ministers such as David Levy, Arik Sharon, Gldeon Patt, Zevujun Hammer and Israel Katz.

The Prime Minister finds himself confronted with the need to reshuffle not only the cabinet, but the entire basis of the coalition on which his rule is founded. It is a daunting challenge. But not meeting it head on could cause even graver dangers.

Settlement liability

SUPREME COURT JUSTICE Withon hit the nail on the bead when he expressed his doubts, in the hearings in the Eilon Moreh lands case, as to whether the Gusb Emunim settlers constituted an asset or a distinct liability to the cause of Israel's security on the West Bank.

The latest demonstrative activities of a group of settlers from Kiryat Arba, a Gueh stronghold, which left one soldier seriously injured should leave little doubt as to the inimical influence of the self-appointed Spokesmen of the Muse of Jewiab History on Israel's security interests in that region.

It is no secret that the settling of Eilon Moreh was forced on Prime Minister Begin by Gusb Emunim. The site Itself did not figure very prominently even in settlement czar Ariel Sharon's order of priorities. The government, however, feels constrained to give in to the golem it itself bas created for a tragic reason: the movements represented by Messrs. Begin, Sharon and Levy, have no potential settlers of their own, having sneered at the very idea of settlement activity since their founding. Without Gush Emunlm, Arik Sharon would bave no people, no matter how tentative their commitment, to settle in his Potemkin viliages.

The issue of settlements will today come up once again in the cabinet in considering Deputy Prime Minister Yadin's appeal against Sharon's interpretation of a nebulous decision in regard to four new settlements. It would be regrettable, however, if the debate were to continue along the personal lines which characterized the altercations at last week's cabinet session.

The Issue of settlement obviously dividee the country, and the cabinet. But even if one accepts the rationale guiding the policy - if one could call it that - of the cabinet majority, there is room for serious criticism regarding the government's loss of control over the entire settlement issue. When it comee to the question of location, timing, and sense of priorities, Arik Sharon's uninhibited initiatives and Gush Emunim's feral visions carry the day.

The army at dawn on Friday seemed to be putting limits to the irresponsible actions of the fanatics. But it was not lost on public opinion that on the very same day, the army's other band — the Military Administration — brought in supplies for a long siege to the Gush Emunim women, illegally occupying the Hadassah building in Hebron for the past five months.

That is government by stealth and confusion at its worst.

"IF THE PRESENT anarchy in domestic affairs is not halted soon. this government will not survive until the 1981 elections," predicts the Likud's Menahem Savidor, a prominent member of the group of MKs who have in the past few months earned themselves the nickname of

'the fighting Liberala." Along with former deputy finance minister Yehezkel Flomin, Moshe Maron and Yitzhak Berman, Savidor had become one of the most outspoken rebeis against the Liberal Party establishment, headed by Finance Minister Simha Ehrlich. It was this group which iast June led the campaign within the party central committee to force the resignation of all four Liberal ministers. causing the odd bedfellows to join forces in a ministerial version of a mutually protective trade union. Although outvoted at the time, the group does not feel defeated and plans to try again, and not necessari-

"I know for a fact," Savidor told

We did so for two years, but the credit we gave the government has now run out. The time has come to quit talking and get down to action. If this is not forthcoming, I will put the good of the stete sbove party interests, and so will other Likud MK's," s vishle alternative either.

"It is not any more attractive to the public. Re-electing Labour would he like appointing a bankrupt to be his debt collector. After all, who was it that left us this system with its monatrously inflated public administration psyrolls and other evils? I sdmlt that the Llkud's firemen have not done an outstanding job in extinguishing the flamss. but it was Labour that ignited and fanned them for 30 years," Savidor maintains.

As he sees it, the most likely solution might well be an across-thelines coalition embracing some of the Likud forces, at least a sizeable chunk of the Alignment, the various Democratic Movement for Change splinters and the National Religious

WHY, in his opinion, is the government incapable of functioning properly? Savidor was never one for mincing his words.

"Because, of the 17 ministerial stars in its firmament, only a mere eix or seven are of ministerial calibre. Most of those put in charge of our economy and domestic affairs are simply not equipped to handle the joh," he asserts. "They lack both s basic theoretical background in economice as well as Indispensable executive and managerisi experience. They haven't the lesdership stamina to withstand pressure. They seem to forget that they are engaged in the real big-time game, and not in the ministure machinations and trade-offs of party politics. Men who were expert st passing scribbled notes in smokefilled rooms don't necessarily make good ministers."

Among the few exceptions Savidor discerns around the esbinet table is Energy Minister Yitzhak Mods'i. Moda'l, significantly glso the only Liberal he considers poseibly qualified for the office he holds, has been a constant thorn in Ehrlich's flesh. Rumour in the Liberal Party has it that, although Savidor is not officially associated with the Moda'i camp, he would not be averse to joining up with him, at least in an ad hoc understanding, at the Liheral con-vention scheduled for December.

THOUGH HE IS more careful when discussing Prime Minister Begin, Savidor does not really spare him

"His tragedy," be says, "is that he reached office too late — as much as 30 years too late, hurdened with the istigue and frail health accumulated in those years. Begin was given probably unprecedented credit by the population when be took over the reins of government. People saw in him the traditional Jewish fusion of intellectual and spiritual strength. He was not one of the upstart technocrats whose intellectual range begins and ends with the Kadoorie agricultural acbool or the Ben Shemen Youth Village. But no longer in his prime, he did not enjoy the strength he once bad and was thought still to possess.

"He was also determined to prove that some of the popular images of bim were erroneous and unfair. Thus, Begin the bawk was now willing to contract peace at any price to prove be was not a warmonger. And to prove he was no tyrant, be allowed a free-for-all in his cahinet, deliberately giving bis ministers freedom' and abstaining from interfering in the workings of their various ministries." Savidor is now very worried by the fact that Begin is not worried.

"Given the state of the economy, he is too optimistic," he says. "He must assert his leadership and tell the people candidly what our situation is. In a very few years we may find ourselves on the hrink of disaster, unable to finance the import of even the most basic raw materials to keep industry going.

There must be an immediate end to the import of frivoious luxuries. State land bas to be made svailable to the general public to ease the housing shortage and lower housing costs. Why can't ministers eet an example in belt tightening? For instance, do they really need their Tel.

SAVIDOR IS convinced that if the salaries of superfluous civil servants up to the age of 45 were paid while they were trained for something more useful, and if this were socomplished by a sufficiently generous grant, many would switch to more productive occupations. He has many more ideas, to which he admits no one really listens. He carries with him bulging portfolios of memorands to ministers, which are either answered politely but non-commitally, or ignored altogether.

"Economics is not Begin's thing and he is not interested in it. And as for his ministers, they have not yet realized that in a democracy, a public official who has failed for any reason whatever must draw the only conclusion and go. With us the failures stay on," he laments.

He repeats his warning that the 90day reprieve granted over eix weeks ago by the Liberal Central Committee to start getting the economy in shape, will not be extended.

"We will not be a rubber stamp to ensure the government a Knesset majority and will not continue to vote with it, if there is no dramatic change in its functioning."

This is a threat the Likud can Illafford to ignore, given the fact that it has already lost two MKs to Banai -Geuls Cohen and Moshe Shamir. Its majority is further threatened by Aguda's ultimatum demanding an amendment of the abortions law, to which much of the Likud is opposed. The Hurvitz splinter of La'am has served notice that its continued membership of the Likud is con-
